Boundaries that Intercede with Child Molesters' Behaviors (Part 1)

Claims of child abuse and molestation are in the news every day, often reporting multi-million-dollar settlements against schools. The current climate is demanding a shift in focus from abuse at home to abuse at school and from reporting to prevention. We are pleased to offer you the Child Sexual Abuse Prevention Webinar Series with Diane Cranley which will introduce specific steps to create an environment where child molesters virtually cannot succeed without being caught and therefore won't want to work.

This seven part webinar series will cover eight informed best practices including an in-depth look at child protection-focused applicant screening processes and boundary policies that will significantly lower the risk of a child in your care being sexually abused. Please watch the short video (see link below) for a sneak peak of the webinar series. More information is available on the attached series summary.

Please join us for Webinar #3 on Thursday, November 15th at 10am.

Presentation Description: Child sexual abuse is a crime that happens in relationship. In fact, research has shown that over 95% of childhood sexual abuse happens at the hands of someone the child knows and trusts. Child molesters use a slow seduction process that not only gives them isolated access to students but also allows them to develop a relationship that keeps kids from telling. However, establishing and enforcing formal boundaries that intercede with the development of these isolated and intimate relationships can decrease the risk of a child being abused and minimize the district's risk in the unfortunate case that abuse does occur. This session is the first, of a two-part series on best practice boundaries and will cover recommendations for on-site and off-site boundaries.

Diane Cranley is the author of 8 Ways to Create their Fate: Protecting the Sexual Innocence of Children in Youth-Serving Organizations and a child sexual abuse prevention consultant. Diane guides school district leaders to create an environment where child molesters virtually cannot succeed without being caught and therefore won't want to work. She is also the Founder and President of TAALK (Talk About Abuse to Liberate Kids), a federally approved, nonprofit agency dedicated to breaking the silence that surrounds child sexual abuse. Diane is working with insurers, JPAs, County Departments of Education, and school districts throughout California to create a brighter and safer tomorrow for our children.
